HISTORY OF THE TALLADEGA (ALPINE) BAPTIST CHURCH

The Talladega(Alpine)Baptist Church, established in 1832, was the first Baptist church in the Creek territory of Alabama. It played a significant part in the religious growth in the wilderness territory of Alabama. It became the “mother” church to other churches established in the area as more settlers flowed into the territory and wanted dismissal from the Talladega Baptist Church to form a church located more conveniently in their community. As more churches were established, the Talladega(Alpine) Baptist Church felt the need to establish an organization of the Baptist churches in the area and called upon the cooperation of other churches to form the Coosa River Baptist Association which is still in existence. Without the leadership of the Talladega(Alpine)Baptist Church, none of these religious growth events would have transpired.

On the 29th day of April, 1832, after being called upon by the brethren in the community of Mardisville, five settlers met in the house of John Lawler, under the direction of ministers, James M. Scott and Joab Lawler, for the purpose of constituting a church. An Abstract of Principles, Rules of Decorum, Church Covenant, and Rules of Church Order were established and the Talladega Baptist Church was constituted.

Meetings were continuing to be held at the home of James Drennon until November, 1832 when a committee was established to find a site for a meeting house. The committee had made a selection; the site was not noted in the Church minutes, but was probably still in the area of Mardisville.

In March 1833, a portion of the members of the Talladega(Alpine) Baptist Church petitioned to leave to be constituted a separate church in Tallasahatchee. On April 27, 1833, the Tallasahatchee church was organized by 24 former members of the Talladega(Alpine)Baptist Church.

At the March 1833 Conference, Louisa, a colored woman, the property of Willis H. Jones, was received into church membership by experience. From that time until 1870, persons of color were admitted to church membership.

In July 1833 the Talladega Baptist Church petitioned sister churches to meet for the purpose of forming an association on the Coosa River. On November 6, 1833, the first meeting was held and on November 9, the Constitution and Rules of Decorum were drawn up and approved for the Coosa River Association of the United Baptist Churches

In 1836 the church resolved to build a larger meeting house. No location was given in the minutes, but was probably still in the area of Mardisville.

One of the wealthiest men in the state of Alabama, Walker Reynolds, became a member of the Talladega(Alpine)Baptist Church on September 6, 1836 until his death in 1871. He was very active in the affairs of the congregation, serving on various committees and holding the position of Treasurer from 1838 to 1843. He used his wealth and influence for the economic development of Alabama and Talladega County. He passed an Act rerouting the railroad through Talladega, being the railroad's chief financier, largest stock purchaser, and a leader in the actual construction of the railroad line. This railroad line would facilitate the transportation of cotton and other farm products to broader markets, while allowing access to rich Alabama mineral deposits, bringing much-needed revenue to the State.

In 1850 the church met to carry out the object of Incorporation.

On June 11, 1870 a committee was appointed to select a location for a new House of worship as the present location was not convenient to the congregation.

On July 9, 1870 a location of land of Mr. N. Welch near Alpine was accepted.

Sometime in 1870 the colored portion of the church withdrew to form a separate congregation numbering 257.

On March 12, 1871 the church let the building of a new house of worship to G. W. Rogan, carpenter.

On January 13, 1872 the congregation met in the new church at Alpine. During the Business Meeting a motion was made and carried to change the name from Talladega Baptist Church to Alpine Baptist Church.

A deed for the five acres of church property was procured on September 14, 1881.

In 1921 the church was electrified and the eight hanging lamps, which were on a pulley system in order to be let down to light, clean, etc. were no longer needed. The enclosed photo is one of the original lamps which has been refurbished over the years for preservation.

In 1954, after 82 years of continuous religious activity, a decision for full time pastoral service was passed, the pastorium was completed and a baptistry was added. Currently, due to the small number in the congregation, in order to meet the pastor's financial needs, he is bi-vocational.

In 1972 the Deacons recommended further additions to the church for Sunday School Rooms and in May of 1973, the church voted to build the complete Educational extension, to include Sunday School rooms, Fellowship Hall, kitchen with full facilities, install central air conditioning and a new lighting system for the Sanctuary.

Currently, the church building remains much as it was in 1973 with the addition of an entry porch at a later date. Maintenance, as needed, to preserve the historical significance of the building is a high priority of the Building and Grounds Committee.

REMAINING HISTORICAL FABRIC

The construction of the window and door moldings in the sanctuary are not mitered, but just butted together, which would seem to indicate that they are very old, and the condition of the sanctuary windows seems to indicate that they are also very old. An interesting feature in the door moldings in the sanctuary are the notches that held curtain rods for the curtains which were used at first instead of doors.

One of the original eight kerosene lamps is on display in the church hallway. It has been refurbished for preservation.

The doors into the Fellowship Hall are the original “back doors” to the one room church. The original key is on display and still can be used to lock the doors.

The silver communion set was given to the church in 1872 by Mr. and Mrs. Alva Hardie and is on display. The cup is still used at special communion services, such as Christmas Eve and Easter.
